Workshop Details

Homes in the Forest

Ian Hepburn, North West Mull Community Woodland Co. (NWMCWC)

<http://www.nwmullwoodland.co.uk/>

NWMCWC intend to develop houses for rent through the Rural Homes for Rent on land they acquired through the National Forest Land Scheme. They are also making plots available for local people to build their own homes with Rural Home Ownership and open market plots. Ian Hepburn will outline the community's plans, how they have reached this stage and how they plan to build, manage and finance this housing development.

Local Occupancy Controls – panacea or panic measure?

Dr. Madhu Satsangi, University of Stirling

Occupancy restrictions have been highlighted as a method of ensuring that 'local people' aren't frozen out of pressured rural housing markets. Madhu has recently completed research for the Scottish Government on the potential use of occupancy restrictions in Scotland, drawing on international comparisons. He will outline his findings in this session.

Community Energy Scotland

Nicholas Gubbins, Chief Executive, Community Energy Scotland

<http://www.communityenergyscotland.org.uk/>

Community Energy Scotland exists to support communities develop community based renewables. Originally operating in the Highlands & Islands, CES now has a Scotland wide remit. This workshop will outline their work, and the potential for community groups and others to use their expertise to help put renewables into affordable housing development

The Scottish National Rural Network

Angela Wiseman, Rural Affairs and Environment, The Scottish Government

<http://www.ruralcommunities.gov.uk/content/thenationalruralnetworks>

The Scottish National Rural Network will be one of four UK country networks linked together at UK level. It will have three main elements - a national event, regional stakeholder groups and a website with social networking tools. The network aims to

- build a common understanding of the key issues for rural development;
- begin a dialogue about these issues; and
- help with the exchange of good practice.

A strong network has considerable potential to drive and inform rural development.

Scotland's Housing Expo Highland Housing Fair

Fiona Porteous, Project Manager

<http://www.scotlandshousingexpo.com/>

The Highlands of Scotland is staging a major housing fair in 2010 to showcase the best of house building design and technology - the first of its kind to be held in Scotland. The keynote of the event is sustainability and it aims to motivate house builders and buyers to make environmentally friendly decisions when it comes to choosing a home. The event will be a catalyst for positive change in the whole area of urban and rural planning, and features homes designed by the winning architects, builders and suppliers who took part in a prestigious competition held in 2007.

Learning Networks

Paul Ballantyne & Geraldine McAteer, Scottish Centre for Regeneration, The Scottish Government

<http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Topics/Built-Environment/regeneration/scr>

Learning Networks are places where a group of people who share a concern, a set of problems or a passion about a topic can deepen their knowledge or expertise by interacting on an ongoing basis. This workshop will highlight the role of Learning Networks in bringing people together to support rural development and regeneration
